MEMPHIS HAS SLIGHT SURPLUS OF LABORERS.

For the first time since America entered the war, Memphis has a slight surplus of labor, according to officers of the United States employment service, 103 South Court avenue. The surplus of white labor is especially notable. While the number unemployed is increasing steadily in the North and East, Tennessee remains comparatively in better condition than the other states. Supply and demand are running neck and neck except in Nashville, where a considerable surplus is reported.

Memphis and other Tennessee cities are taking care of returning soldiers in an admirable manner, but there is need of continued co-operation between employers and the U. S. employment service. Since the coming of the soldier, sailor and marine to Memphis, 103 South Court avenue, every applicant has been referred to a job. Relatively few returned fighters are on the waiting list.
